

Art & Architecture: a Digital Learning Resource

Project Director – up to £40,000

Art & Architecture is a 3-year project funded by the New Opportunities Fund's Digitise programme to create the UK's leading digital image collection and learning resource on Western art and architecture drawn from the Courtauld Institute of Art's world-class collections of paintings, drawings and photographs. The project will include the digitisation of 40,000 images, the creation of a searchable database and the development of educational content aimed at teachers and learners of all levels and ages. All material will be delivered through a dedicated website. For more information on the wider NOF programme see www.nof.org.uk

The Courtauld is looking to appoint an outstanding candidate as Project Director, to lead the project and take full responsibility for its implementation and delivery. This will include detailed project planning and scheduling, the recruitment of a new team, procurement of equipment and systems, management of the overall production process and systems development to meet targets for online delivery starting December 2002. The postholder will report to a Project Board and provide the main interface between the Courtauld Institute and the New Opportunities Fund.

The successful applicant will have a background in IT and project management, a knowledge of digitisation technology and processes and, preferably, prior experience in the cultural and education sectors. S/he will have demonstrable experience of developing and delivering projects in this area. Organisational and management skills are essential.

The position is offered for a fixed term of 2 3/4 years (starting January 2002 at the latest).

A salary of £30 - 40,000 will be offered, depending on experience. The Courtauld Institute of Art is ideally looking for a full-time appointment, but will consider more flexible options if appropriate.
