

The British
Psychological
Society

One-day Conference

Psychology & Human Rights

Helping to create a human rights culture

Church House, Westminster, Thursday 17 November 2005

- ◆ This conference, organised by the British Psychological Society, will bring together policy makers, psychologists and other professionals.
- ◆ We will address how psychological science and the professional work of applied psychologists can help politicians enact their plans for reforms to public services in the context of human rights considerations, and how psychology can help develop a human rights culture in the UK.

- ◆ How can psychologists help support the development of a human rights culture?
- ◆ What should psychologists learn from policy makers?
- ◆ What can policy makers learn from psychologists?

Psychological perspectives on Human Rights

- ◆ Basic human needs
- ◆ Reciprocity
- ◆ Sexuality
- ◆ Autonomy
- ◆ Respect
- ◆ Diversity

A Human Rights culture...

- ◆ The Human Rights Act
- ◆ The Commission for Equality and Human Rights

Topics covered in the conference will include:

- ◆ Asylum & immigration
- ◆ Mental Health
- ◆ Sexuality
- ◆ Civil partnerships
- ◆ Gender recognition
- ◆ Law & order

Visit www.bps.org.uk/events for further details & registration form. Delegate fees £150

'Psychology is action, not thinking about oneself' Albert Camus