

Department of Applied Social Science

Two Chairs/Readerships in Sociology/Social Policy

Professorial Minimum £46,758 p.a. (subject to job evaluation)

UNIVERSITY OF STIRLING

The Department of Applied Social Science undertakes applied social scientific research within a large interdisciplinary department which received a '5' rating in the 2001 RAE. As these are senior positions, you should have established a research profile in the main areas of Departmental activity, have a strong track record in research and publications and a proven ability to raise external research funding. You must also provide evidence of relevant national and international research links, and have proven qualities of academic leadership. Departmental research is organised under four groups: social divisions, social policy and governance, life course, and crime and criminal justice. Full details of the research work undertaken by these groups can be found on the DASS website. It is expected that you would head up one of these groups.

You will also contribute to the teaching of sociology, social policy and criminology at both undergraduate and postgraduate level, and supervise postgraduate research students.
