The Hertfordshire Biological Records Centre* is the repository for biological records and focus for ecological advice in the county. We need you to support volunteer data providers in their role; help a variety of data users meet their needs (increasingly via the Internet); analyse and present data locally; ensure our records management systems meet developing requirements; and as our lead ecologist support the development of other team members. You will need advanced interpersonal, ecological, analytical and data management skills, a positive approach to problem-solving and a clear capability to master specialist software in use in the sector.

We are open to ecologists who have assembled these skills in different ways, for example in a records management, computer or university environment. Perhaps some have been developed out of work.

In return, we will work with your own research interests where appropriate to the business, be very flexible on our approach to the work-life balance, and enable you to complete associated training needs.

*HBRC is a service administered by Hertfordshire County Council on behalf of all sponsors. Hertfordshire County Council will be the employing body.
