2009 Joint Seminar Series on Inter-cultural Therapy with Children and Families

Hybridization as a Therapeutic Challenge: Couple and Family Work across Bicultural Divides

Friday, November 20th, 2009
2:00 pm to 5:00 pm

This seminar explores the therapeutic challenges of working with family members representing multiple generations with quite different cultural values. Hybridization of cultural frames of reference influences alliance building, dynamics and strategies in the family therapy context. The identifications and frames of reference are issues evident in the internal and external worlds of the family and the therapist. Reframing and forming alliances to shift functioning of family or couple systems present ethical and empathic challenges. Generational transmission of values and trauma raises interesting dynamic issues, sometimes promoting health and wellness, at other times culture is used as a defence against any reflection or remapping of family or couple options. Clinical vignettes will serve as a path to enter this territory and highlight issues that emerge in proposing strategies for couple and family work.
