

Open Call for Participants

'Exploring the Banlieue' Summer School

Monday July 8th – Friday July 12th 2013

Deadline for applications: Friday 24th May 2013

Banlieue Network is running a Summer School in July 2013 in the Greater Paris area with the aim of exploring key aspects of the French banlieue (sub)culture. Our core group of participants is formed by members of the Network but limited places are now available for scholars, research students and urban practitioners who would be interested in contributing. Please find below information on the aims, the programme and the application process.

1. About the Summer School

Designed for researchers, research students (in particular at PhD-level), practitioners and urbanists whose work addresses notions of urban space and peripheral communities, this international Summer School provides a week-long inter-disciplinary programme exploring key aspects of the French banlieue (sub)culture. The programme aims to offer participants an opportunity to exchange their specific knowledge and personal or professional experience by engaging in a series of lectures, debates and urban walks on the theme of representations of the banlieue. The Summer School will run in parallel with a programme of creative workshops for young people living in the Greater Paris suburbs, with opportunities for researchers and young people to exchange and debate on issues around creative representations of the suburbs.

Launched by 'Banlieue Network', a group of scholars, artists and urban practitioners who aim to contribute to new thinking about future visions of the city and pathways for sustainable urban development, the Summer School programme has been developed in collaboration with the City Council of Drancy and other local partners. The programme draws on the advanced theoretical, empirical and practical specialisms of contributors in a range of disciplines, from sociology and urbanism to film and literature. The lectures will be given by scholars specialised in different areas of banlieue studies. The programme will explore the practice of suburban image making informed by a reflexive and critical perspective, including urban walks focusing on the suburban landscape and the opportunity for urban photography.

2. Programme

The Summer School programme is structured around a series of presentations, talks and discussions in the morning, followed by urban walks in the afternoon, led by specialists from the neighbourhood and accompanied by local residents. Researchers will be encouraged to take digital photos during the walks and engage in creative writing, which will contribute to the creative aims of the Summer School. The walks will be followed by a discussion with young people from the neighbourhoods who will have taken part in workshops related to cultural representations of their neighbourhood.

The Summer School will be based in Saint-Denis. The presentations will take place in the morning at the Maison de Science de l'Homme Paris Nord (4 rue de la Croix Faron 93210 St-Denis la Plaine). After these sessions, participants will be divided into small groups and will join the creative workshops run by artists in the communities of Drancy, Bondy, Saint-Denis (and possibly La Courneuve – still waiting for the confirmation of the city council). These sessions will start with a lunch and end with an afternoon snack which will be offered by the city council. They will also provide us with a room equipped with computer and projector. The workshops will be aimed at young residents of the communities aged 16-23. The creative workshops will be composed of 2 hour-sessions and will be led by photographers, writers and other artists.

After the creative workshops participants will meet again in the early evening for an urban walk guided by people living in the communities who have a particular knowledge of their neighbourhood. The walks will be led by the workshop tutors and artists.

2.1. Walks and Evening Programmes at the Communities

His current projects include a study on urban development in post-war France and The Durham Centre for Advanced Photography, of which he is a founding member and co-director.

3. Participants

The Summer School aims to foster an interdisciplinary learning and creative environment in order to facilitate knowledge transfer and synthesis between theory and practice of suburban space. It will be particularly relevant to those with an interest in the representations of the urban periphery, from different disciplinary perspectives.

We aim to recruit a range of researchers with an active involvement in debates around the nature of city spaces and how artistic images might not only convey meaning but can also contribute to advancing knowledge and understanding about communities on the periphery and challenging the prejudice attached to them.

Attendance at the Summer School is free, although participants are expected to cover the costs of their travel, accommodation, breakfast and evening dinner. Lunch and tea will be provided. The number of places at the Summer School is limited to 20 in total. It is expected that participants are available to attend the Summer School for the full week. .

4. Outcomes

The Summer School will provide participants with a structured framework of theoretical talks, discussions and debates, visual presentations and urban walks, including the opportunity to capture images of the suburbs through photography. Participants will immerse themselves in a suburban environment where they are expected to share in the experience of knowledge transfer which will advance their knowledge on suburban communities. They will benefit from opportunities to exchange their views and experience with scholars, researchers, artists, practitioners, and members of the communities involved in the Summer School which will help them develop a nuanced understanding of the banlieue subculture and social phenomena attached to the suburbs.

At the end of the Summer School, a touring exhibition will be organized with a curated selection of participants' photographs and written texts, provided by both the researchers as well as young people from the suburbs. This work will be showcased in France, Britain and other European countries through an exhibition and a bilingual non-academic book communicating the 'banlieue' experience beyond its locality and providing a resource to challenge negative stereotypes.

5. Practical Information

The working language of the Summer School will be French but some of the creative contributions may be produced in English.

Participants are encouraged to bring a digital camera, or mobile phone with camera, so that photos taken on the urban walks can be uploaded to Facebook or other social media platforms. Please ensure that all equipment is covered by insurance as the Summer School takes no responsibility for items lost or stolen whilst attending or travelling to the course.

For participants who do not live in the Paris area, hotels will be suggested that are near the Summer School venue. Details will be provided at a later date.
