

Department of Life Sciences

Lecturer/Senior Lecturer in Evolutionary Anthropology (1.0 FTE)

HR Ref No: HR 29/14

Salary: £36,962 to £48,453 pa inclusive of London Weighting Allowance

Applications are invited for a full-time, without-term Lectureship/Senior Lectureship in Evolutionary Anthropology. Roehampton has established an excellent reputation for its research and teaching in anthropology. With substantial recent investment, we have broadened our scope and built a very strong interdisciplinary team comprising both biological and social anthropologists. The new post will contribute further to this overall strategy. Our research is supported by excellent laboratory facilities and fieldwork resources.

We are looking for applicants whose research interests are both distinctive from, and complementary to, those of staff within the Centre for Research in Evolutionary and Environmental Anthropology, who will contribute to our well-established undergraduate anthropology programme and our highly successful MRes in primatology. We would particularly welcome applications from those whose research is at the interface of biological anthropology and other areas (e.g. health, environment and conservation, social anthropology). Research interests linked to other areas of the department and the ability to contribute to teaching on other programmes may be an advantage.

We are seeking applications from highly motivated and creative candidates who have a track record and further potential to deliver excellent quality research and who will deliver high quality teaching and student support at both undergraduate and postgraduate levels. The appointee will have an evolutionary focus and strong analytical skills.

The University of Roehampton is set on a beautiful, traditional campus in south-west London. The University provides its students with exceptional facilities, high quality teaching and a close-knit, collegiate experience.

Roehampton has a diverse student body and a cosmopolitan outlook, with students from over 130 countries. The University is committed to a strong research culture, with two of its departments ranked the best in the country. Roehampton is on an ambitious trajectory and seeks to build on its increasing popularity by developing an innovative and distinctive portfolio.

Please quote HR Ref No: HR 29/14

Please note that CVs alone will not be considered.

Closing date no later than 5.00pm: Thursday 27 February 2014

Application forms and links to the Post Information Pack can be found on our website: <http://www.roehampton.ac.uk/Human-Resources/Job-Opportunities/>