

Germany, 1968 – Does it (still) matter?

In 1964, theology student and US citizen Gretchen Klotz visited West Berlin and fell in love. In 1966, she married the prominent German student leader Rudi Dutschke and moved to West Berlin. After an assassination attempt in April 1968 left him severely injured, the Dutschkes were forced into exile. Since her husband's death in 1979, Gretchen Dutschke Klotz has published several books and articles about his life. Her new book focuses on 1968.

At 5pm on 11 May, she will give a fascinating overview of the anti-authoritarian movement in West Germany, and discuss its relevance today. The talk will be followed by a Q&A session and a wine reception. The event will take place in the Webb Library at Jesus College, Cambridge.

This is a free event, but booking is essential. To register online, go to:

<http://www.eventbrite.com/e/talk-by-gretchen-dutschke-klotz-tickets-24433993733>

Please contact Dr Katharina Karcher (kk552@cam.ac.uk) should you have any questions.

 UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE
Department of German and Dutch

 CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY
GERMAN SOCIETY

