Introduction

Former socialist countries newly adhered to the European Union face difficulties in adapting to and implementing EU policies on inclusion of disadvantaged populations i.e. disabled people and Roma individuals. We invite experts on this field of research to contribute to an anthology where each chapter describes and analyses a bottom-up study of the implementation of inclusion policies.

Objective

The purpose of this editorial project is to capture the various nuances of transition from one doctrine to another, showing the commonalities of this transition for all countries involved, but also discussing the various ways in which each country has experienced the transitions and adapted to them.

Target audience

The book will primarily be aimed at students (both graduate and undergraduate) of social work, political science, sociology and anthropology (in addition to various cross-disciplinary studies). We also believe that the book will be of interest to practitioners of social work, employment assistants and other street-level bureaucrats in post-socialist countries. In addition, the book will be highly relevant for consultants and NGO-workers across Europe. In other words, the book will be of interest for students, practitioners and policy makers.

Submission procedure

Proposals should not exceed 300 words. If accepted, the author (s) will be invited to submit an extended abstract of approximately 1000 words. Submitted abstracts must be written in English and contain authors' names, affiliation and e-mail address.

The correspondence should be submitted to janne.i.breimo@nord.no
