

DIVERSITY MATTERS

WELCOME TO THE 26TH EDEN ANNUAL CONFERENCE

13-16 JUNE, 2017 IN JÖNKÖPING, SWEDEN.

Submissions still welcome!

The ever-changing media- and technology landscapes create opportunities for learning at all stages in life in formal and informal settings. New policies and practices have to take into account the “inclusion” or “exclusion” of different groups in society.

How do educators deal with diversity in media and technology enhanced learning environments?
How can such diversity be accounted for and used to transform and adapt online learning settings?
How do educators, stakeholders and policy makers meet digital inequalities? What are the new challenges for teachers and educators in the new media landscapes to create meaningful contexts for learning?

It is of great importance to study how the educational framing, from policy level down to the actual learning situation, allows for various types of e-learning, open and distance education. One challenge is the often-fragmented view of what has been achieved theoretically and practically in this field, and the ever-increasing offer of technology. How do we bring together the strengths of the past with the opportunities for the future? Co-ordination of information, knowledge and creativity is of high importance for the educational experience.

EDEN 2017 is the forum that offers a chance to work together for these goals, and to gain further insight into the core questions.

Networking and interactivity, sharing and discussion will be core aspects of the conference experience, focusing on what you can learn from and with your peers.

The conference is organized by EDEN in co-operation with Jönköping University.
