Gender, war and the 'man' problem: from Vietnam to Afghanistan

Professor Sandra Walklate, University of Liverpool

The 'deviant' military male has historically and contemporarily been put in the frame for political and policy interventions. This paper will explore the changing nature of the 'deviant' soldier, and what this focus makes visible and leaves invisible for criminological accounts of crime, violence and victimisation. By drawing upon examples of 'deviant' soldiers from Vietnam and Afghanistan this paper will consider alternative possibilities for thinking about the 'deviant soldier' and their relationship with masculinity.
