Upcoming International Conference at the University of Erfurt, Germany
29th to 31st August 2019

Research in Literature in Language Learning Environments: Patterns and Possibilities

The AILA Literature in Language Learning and Teaching Research Network together with the University of Erfurt

Second Call for Papers

From grammar translation methods which focused on canonical works of literature to contemporary approaches to extensive reading of young adult literature or the use of graphic novels, literary texts have long been a major part of foreign and second language learning. Their continuing importance is validated in the newly published descriptors for reading for pleasure and literary analysis in the companion volume to the CEFR (2017).

This conference will focus on researching literature in language learning and teaching to provide an empirical basis for our use of literary texts. It positions itself on the interface between literary studies, education, and applied linguistics. We welcome papers from all these disciplines, both papers relying on traditional methods of enquiry as well as papers focusing on innovative approaches. The main impetus for the conference is to advance our field forward academically.

Confirmed Keynote Speakers

Geoff Hall, University of Nottingham, UK

Claire Kramsch, University of Berkeley, USA

Emer O'Sullivan, Leuphana Universität Lüneburg, Germany

We welcome proposals that focus on one or more of the following:

- a. Results of empirical studies, including
  - quantitative and qualitative research;
  - case studies of classrooms;
  - curricular research;
  - textbook research;
  - attitudes of teachers and learners
- b. Systematic reviews of previously published research
- c. Detailed descriptions of innovative research methods
- d. Reports on piloting and validating research instruments
- e. New research paradigms in researching literature in language learning and teaching
- f. Research into creative writing with language learners
- g. Historical research into the role of literature in language teaching

All levels of education are welcome – from use of picture books with young learners to the development of literary competence in an L2 in tertiary education.
